Task1

In linguistics, traditional grammar is a prescriptive approach to studying language that is concerned with the rules and conventions of language usage. This includes the study of morphology, syntax, and semantics, and focuses on the normative aspects of language rather than its actual use. Traditional grammar emphasizes the role of correct usage and adherence to prescriptive rules, rather than considering the dynamic and evolving nature of language. While traditional grammar has contributed to the development of standard language usage, it is often criticized for being overly prescriptive and ignoring the natural variation and creativity of language use. As such, modern linguistic approaches have shifted towards a descriptive approach, which seeks to describe language as it is actually used, rather than prescribing how it should be used.
